Brow Microblading Expectations

- Microblading will appear extremely intense and thick immediately after the procedure.
- The color will not even look right the first few days. Other factors are added to the permanent makeup pigment bottles to counteract the undertones of facial skin.
 - Browns can look orangish-brown, blonde brows may look too yellow, ect. Some colors initially look too bright and others look too dark. But don't worry- it changes.
- Excess pigment sheds off over the next 2-3 days, and then the skin starts healing over.
- A layer of healed skin on top of the pigment masks and tones it down considerably.
- As the swelling goes down the lines will be thinner. On about the fourth day you are close to looking normal and no one notices anything.
- Colors will continue to soften over the next few weeks. It will look very natural in 1-2 months.

What's normal with Brow Microblading?

- Treated area will flake
- When applying ointment pigment will come off on the Q-tip
- After the first procedure permanent makeup will appear to be thinner
- Final healed result is at about 1-2 months
 - Under NO CIRCUMSTANCES will you be allowed to get a touch-up before this time. If a touch-up is needed, it cannot be done any sooner than 1 month after the procedure. Performing a touch-up too early can cause scarring and permanent damage to the treated area.

Everyone's body chemistry is different. Depending on anti-aging products used, sun exposure, smoking habits, prescription medication, skin texture, skin complexion, and or immune system some pigments may fade more than others. If your microblading lightens and/or seems nonexistent please do not panic. During a touch-up modifications can be made to adjust the procedure to your situation. Loss of pigment is normal with some individuals.
